

The endorsement of Proposition 22 by both Governor Brown and Richard M. Nixon seemed certain today to move the issue further into the field of non-partisanship. The proposition involves an administrative change in the licensing of osteopaths in the state.

Governor Brown signed the enabling bills presented to him by the Legislature at its last session which provided the machinery whereby doctors of medicine and osteopathic physicians and surgeons were merged professionally if they chose. Last summer more than 90 per cent of the osteopaths accepted M.D. degrees and now practice medicine on a parallel level with long-time doctors of medicine.

governor urged the completion of the final step of the merger, an affirmative vote on Proposition 22 by the electorate in November. The state's chief executive called the merger "a giant step which can only afford better health care for California patients."

Governor Brown said, "This merger will open restricted research in hospital facilities to all throughout the state at a time when population pressures are already putting a strain on existing facilities. He congratulated both professions for a "great and badly needed action taken after careful study of health problems as they exist throughout California."

both professional organizations on the merger and asked for a positive vote on Proposition 22 "in the interest of better health care throughout California."

Mr. Nixon said, "The actions of these professional men in bringing all of their talents to bear against disease is an outstanding example of cooperation in a vital area affecting all of our lives. I wholeheartedly endorse Proposition 22 and urge a 'YES' vote which will assure better health for all."
